Scotch Tweeds owe their name to a slip of the pen and not to the River Tweed as one might readily suppose.

About a century ago in London there sprang up a great demand for Scottish 'twills." Now it so happened that

"tweel" was the Scottish form for twill, better known to most of us as the "diagonal weave." In making out an invoice the Scot, who was probably a much better weaver than penman, by a slip wrote 'tweeds" instead of "tweels." The London merchant, thinking the change intentional and the new name appropriate, used it when next ordering. As the cloth caught public favor, the name has been preserved ever since.

Scotch tweeds! A good showing among our men's winter suits.
